he Big Bend and Texas Mountains Travel Guide is a regional travel publication covering a wide range of far West Texas including: the remarkable Big Bend National Park; one of state's largest cities (El Paso); the economically booming Midland and Odessa; the eclectic Marfa; the border town of Presidio; and everywhere in between. The longevity of the publication — produced since 1985 — is a testament to its value for the traveler, but also demonstrates the effectiveness of the Guide for advertisers who need to reach these potential customers. With approximately 100,000 copies of this annual publication distributed, the information contained within is read, studied and acted on throughout the year.

TARGET AUDIENCE

The Big Bend and Texas Mountains Travel Guide is the best resource for anyone traveling in far West Texas. Whether travelers are just passing through on I-10 and need to find a place to spend the night, or a local resident looking to make a weekend trip within the region, or a family that has come from a country on the other side of the globe for an extended stay, the Big Bend and Texas Mountains Travel Guide is one of the most important things they can carry with them.

About Us

Ramser Media

The Big Bend and Texas Mountains Travel Guide is published by Ramser Media. Ramser Media is now in its 14th year, and their projects include: Texas Music magazine and Horns Illustrated magazine (sold in 2011). In addition the staff at Ramser Media have been involved with many other projects over the years including producing the Lone Star Bash at the Brewery in San Antonio, producing the Downtown Live concert serries in Austin, publishing the 35-year anniversary book for Billy Bob's Texas in Fort Worth and a book for the Texas Museum of Fiber Arts and publishing festival programs for Austin City Limits Music Festival and Lollapalooza (in Chicago).

Stewart Ramser is founder and publisher of Ramser Media. He is responsible for launching the Viva Big Bend music festival in 2012, and in 2013 started the Viva Big Bend food festival in far West Texas. In addition, he currently serves the City of Alpine as the tourism director. This will be the third year that Ramser Media is producing the Guide. Ramser Media publishes the annual guide based on an agreement in place with the Texas Mountain Trail (more information below).

Texas Mountain Trail

As a non-profit organization, the Texas Mountain Trail region supports and encourages heritage travel to far West Texas. They work with parks, museums and historic sites to help them get ready for the traveler. The best trails, adventures, exhibits and special events in the Big Bend, the Davis Mountains, Guadalupe Mountains and the historic city of El Paso can be found on the Texas Mountain Trail website, www.texasmountaintrail.com and on the daily photo blog at: www.texasmountaintrail.blogspot.com. And they're part of a network of ten Texas Heritage Trails regions, so adventures across the state can be connected.

Please note although the Big Bend & Texas Mountains Travel Guide is published through a partnership with the Texas Mountain Trail (TMT), the Guide's geographic scope extends beyond the area covered by the TMT.

TESTIMONIALS

"The Texas Mountain Trail Region's social media marketing is second to none. Reading the posts — primarily those on Facebook — has given me a better understanding of the region's history, culture, terrain, and attractions. The photos beckon me to come. Because of the the Texas Mountain Trail Region's social media outreach, Far West Texas claims the #1 spot on my "must see" list of places to visit in 2013."

"I trust whenever I refer cyclists to the resources available from Texas Mountain Trail, they will find real gems and great support to create the best Far West Texas bicycle travel experience"

Jennifer Milyko

Adventure Cycling Association

"I look forward to taking trips to West Texas because I know that I can talk to the Mountain Trail on Twitter and Facebook to get great tips about where to go and what to do. It's like having the Trail in my pocket or purse; always there and always helpful.

I've never been to Van Horn and some of the other far-flung towns in West Texas, but I've got a short bucket list of them going thanks to the Mountain Trail's fantastic Daily Photo blog and pictures on Facebook. It makes those places come alive for me.

As a travel blogger, I love writing about West Texas because then I get to share my work with the Mountain Trail, who always 'answers the social media phone' when I call. It's fun to see my work mentioned on the Trail's Facebook and Twitter networks — that's why it's called SOCIAL media!

When a friend of mine asked on Twitter whether anyone had good information about Big Bend (he and his family were thinking about a trip there) I was so happy to connect him with the Texas Mountain Trail. I knew they'd take good care of him with solid info, but also that the Trail is superb at carrying on social media conversations while visitors are in the area. Sure enough, he took lots of photos while he was there, referred to the Mountain Trail in many of them and tweeted about his experience. Not too shabby since he has more than 22,000 Twitter followers."
